

Dr. Lynn Hunter
Trillium Learning, Regional Projects Director
Global Language & Culture Project
Children's Author, and Videoconferencing Expert

Dr. Lynn Hunter is an innovator, leader and pioneer in the Education Industry. She has been a teacher, writer and producer for a variety of children's entertainment projects. Lynn has marketed, consulted with and represented dozens of national publishing companies.

As founder of Educational Media Enterprises, she has provided consultant support and services to hundreds of administrators, teachers, parents for dozens of national publishers.

While working as a district level community relations officer, Lynn served to influence the local media and non-instructional operational levels of the educational system. Then, as an Educational Specialist to Public Relations Firms, she successfully implemented innovative strategies for public awareness and successful trend setting by implementation of educational programs.

With the challenges of the 21st Century, Lynn realizes the need to integrate cutting-edge technologies into education. Therefore, 10 years ago, she returned to NYC Public Schools as a Distance Learning/Videoconferencing Coordinator and Technology Integration Specialist. There she had the unique opportunity of creating and implementing a new vision for classroom instruction utilizing videoconferencing as a tool for educational reform in a "Global Community".

Lynn has presented her vision for Videoconferencing in the classroom at State-wide conferences and been invited to speak to educators around the world. Recently, she accepted a position on the executive board of the NY/Metro Chapter of the United States Distance Learning Association.

As author and creator of "The Dooples", Dr. Hunter developed a children's book series based on a group of animated writing tools that come to life to teach early learning strategies. Her first two books, Meet the Dooples and Dooples and the Shapes, (www.dooples.com), with accompanying instructional guides, audio and video-tapes were published in 2000. Since then, she has been using these stories as content for all ages, speaking to parents and teachers, as well as writing, producing video tapes and producing programs for videoconferencing.

Currently, she has embarked on a new career combining her lifetime experiences and skills in education. Through Educational Media Enterprises, Dr. Hunter provides services and resources to administrators, parents, teachers and students implementing original live, interactive videoconferencing programs in order to enhance instruction and communication globally.
